Cocina en Acero inoxidable puro y fuerte

Feb 5, 2016

El Arquitecto Alberto Torsello de cocinas Abimis ha diseñado una cocina de acero inoxidable. Las cocinas son hechos a mano en Italia y construidos totalmente en acero inoxidable. La superficie es resistente a los rasguños y marcas sean difíciles para el ojo de ver. Los compartimentos de almacenamiento tienen profundas baldas extraíbles para el espacio de almacenamiento adicional. El diseño es limpio y cada elemento elaborado sea fácil de usar.

Conçue par Alberto Torsello et réalisée par un spécialiste des cuisines professionnelles, cette cuisine tout inox s'organise autour d'un immense îlot. Elle permet de préparer les repas en 5 étapes comme dans les restaurants avec des éléments pros pour la conservation, la préparation, la cuisson, la présentation et le lavage. Elle ne manque dans ce modèle réalisé sur mesure. "Ego", Abimis, prix sur devis.

Kitchen of the Week: An All-Stainless Design in a Paris Loft

February 11, 2016 6:00 AM

BY Margot Guralnick (/About/Margot-Guralnick)

Meet the heavy metal kitchen: an all stainless steel design, from countertops to cupboards, imported from Italy for a Paris loft belonging to a young family. The 1,830-square-foot République apartment is the work of Hugo and Charlotte de Tonnac Sauzay, the husband-and-wife team at Festen Architecture (<http://www.festenarchitecture.com/>), who devised a soaring white open living space with spiral metal stair—and a kitchen too beautiful not to be on full display.

Photography courtesy of Abimis (<http://abimis.com/en/noop>), unless noted.

Above: Situated at one end of the loft, the kitchen has a lab-like stainless steel island and wall cabinet by Abimis of Milan that manage to look both retro and a sign of things to come.

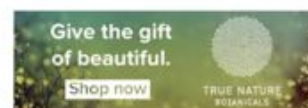

An offshoot of hotel kitchen specialists, Prisma, Abimis (<http://abimis.com/en/our-lines>) was founded in 2013 to supply complete restaurant-grade designs for home settings. Abimis's work is fabricated to order and custom fit for each setting. Festen used the company's Ego line (<http://abimis.com/en/ego-line>) designed by architect Alberto Torsello.

Above: The cupboard has a refrigerator and freezer in the center (with zones that are "cool, refrigerated, and room temperature") flanked by pantry compartments. Note the lack of sharp corners even on the flush-mounted doors: rounded edges, the company notes, are easier to keep clean and work well "with the actions of the user."

Above: Abimis uses extra-thick, scratch- and ding-resistant AISI 304 stainless steel and its worktops are fabricated from single sheets. There's a reason restaurants rely on stainless: In addition to being heat resistant and hygienic, it doesn't stain or rust. Learn more pros and cons in [Remodeling 101: Stainless Countertops](http://www remodelista.com/posts/remodeling-101-stainless-steel-countertops) (<http://www remodelista.com/posts/remodeling-101-stainless-steel-countertops>).

Above: The island is fitted with a range and induction cooktop, plus warming and storage drawers. Abimis, we were told, makes some of its own appliances and also collaborates with Miele, Gaggenau, and Neff.

Above: The sink stands in front of one of the loft's expansive factory windows (with a netted ceiling that makes the kitchen area feel more intimate).

Above: The island is intended for food prep and serving; it's higher and deeper than the norm, Abimis notes, for better ergonomics. The sink is extra wide to accommodate professional-size cookware. There's a dishwasher next to it, and under it, a trash bin that's refrigerated to "reduce the proliferation of bacteria and bad odors."

Abimis presents Atelier

By Melanie Gardener - February 25, 2016

Abimis presents Atelier – a kitchen the company describes as having a 'haute-couture' soul. Abimis is exhibiting at the show.

The Abimis brand is a result of parent company Prisma's extensive expertise in the large-scale

Abimis kitchens are designed for private settings (such as the one we featured here) but also professional kitchens.

2016 sees the launch of two new models in the Atelier line – Chelsea and Bagutta. The name which is to celebrate the high quality of its Italian production processes with hand-crafted fir ensuring the brand, and its designs, are relevant within an international market.

The Chelsea and Bagutta models by Atelier are available with two different types of worktop profile, in steel or other materials suitable for culinary use, and they also feature squared do composition a clean-cut and tidy appearance. The rounded internal compartments also make opportunity for dirt build-up, guaranteeing superior levels of hygiene.

In addition to the worktop, Atelier can also be produced with customised doors, which can be made from different materials, and available with or without a handle, with a practical invisible groove. The steel is available in different variants.

Abimis kitchens afford the perfect balance of functionality and beguiling appearance, distinguished by their design. They leave free reign for customisation of details and quality design.

Every detail in Abimis kitchens is designed to stand the test of time and to make an impress
